

ABSTRACT

A system of antennas, software, and methods are provided for locating and identifying objects that include RF transponders. A single antenna driver feeds a signal to a multiplexer, which activates sequentially the antennas of the system. A return signal is matched with the known signatures of an object. The object is matched with the known location of the antenna that provided the return signal.